On Campaign Experience

I'm applying as a junior candidate and want to be upfront: I have not yet managed a live paid Google Ads campaign with real budget and ROAS data to report. Rather than presenting invented numbers, here is what I bring instead — a genuine grasp of how campaigns are structured and measured, plus a concrete plan to prove myself quickly on the job.

What I Understand About Campaign Performance

- Budget & bidding: daily/campaign budget caps, Manual vs. Target ROAS / Target CPA bidding strategies, and how bid adjustments affect delivery.
- Core metrics: CTR (clicks ÷ impressions), CPC, Conversion Rate, CPA, and ROAS (revenue ÷ ad spend) — and how they interact (e.g., a high CTR with low conversion rate signals a landing-page or targeting mismatch, not just a bad ad).
- Structure & optimization: campaign/ad group/keyword hierarchy, negative keywords, A/B testing ad copy, and using Google Analytics / Looker Studio to trace spend through to conversions.

Why I Can Move Fast Despite Being New to Paid Ads

- Data & analytics foundation: Electrical & Computer Engineering graduate (Addis Ababa University, CGPA 3.68, Great Distinction) — trained in structured, metrics-driven problem solving.
- Real audience-growth experience: I run a child growth & development YouTube channel end-to-end — content strategy, publishing cadence, and reading audience-retention/CTR analytics to decide what to make next.
- Builder mindset: I design and ship my own tools (full-stack web apps, automated content pipelines), so I pick up new platforms — like Google Ads — quickly and document what I learn.

My Plan to Have Real Numbers Within Days

I am completing the free Google Ads Search Certification (Skillshop) this week. In parallel, I'm running a small self-funded pilot campaign promoting my own YouTube channel, so that by the time we speak again I can walk you through an actual budget, actual CTR, and actual results — set up and analyzed by me, not simulated. I'd rather show you one honest real campaign than a polished fictional one.
